secrets and leaks examines the complex relationships among executive power national security and secrecy state secrecy is vital for national security but it can also be used to conceal wrongdoing how then can we ensure that this power is used responsibly typically the onus is put on lawmakers and judges who are expected to oversee the executive yet because these actors lack access to the relevant information and the ability to determine the harm likely to be caused by its disclosure they often defer to the executive s claims about the need for secrecy as a result potential abuses are more often exposed by unauthorized disclosures published in the press but should such disclosures which violate the law be condoned drawing on several cases rahul sagar argues that though whistleblowing can be morally justified the fear of retaliation usually prompts officials to act anonymously that is to leak information as a result it becomes difficult for the public to discern when an unauthorized disclosure is intended to further partisan interests because such disclosures are the only credible means of checking the executive sagar writes they must be tolerated and at times even celebrated however the public should treat such disclosures skeptically and subject irresponsible journalism to concerted criticism the committee calls for better and more accessible procedures for civil servants to raise concerns about the conduct of government a route should to be established whereby evidence that a minister had misled parliament or the public could be reported to parliament following a complaint by a civil servant leaks damage trust within government and trust in government the committee concludes that leak investigations are often hamstrung by the fact that many leaks are politically motivated including leaks from ministers and special advisers the most effective way to prevent leaks by civil servants is to have accessible effective and visible ways for individuals to raise concerns about the conduct of government either internally or through an external oversight body the civil service commissioners the report makes the following key recommendations the civil service commissioners should have the power to report to parliament evidence indicating that the government was misleading parliament or the public or the fact that the civil service has refused to act on a justified complaint the commissioners should also conduct independent investigation of breaches of confidentiality by special advisers the leaking of information should only be a criminal matter where there is a breach of the official secrets act or there is evidence of serious criminal misconduct the cabinet office heads of departments and the civil service commissioners should do more to ensure that potential whistleblowers know how to raise concerns and have the confidence to come forward with them
