student retention continues to be a vexing problem for all colleges and universities in spite of the money spent on creating programs and services to help retain students until they achieve their academic and personal goals and graduate the figures have not improved over time this is particularly true for minority students who have a greater attrition rate than majority students demographic information shows that the minority population in the united states is growing at a faster rate than the majority it is imperative that educational institutions find ways to help improve retention rates for all students but particularly minority students retention rates should not differ appreciably among different racial ethnic groups the journal of college student retention research theory and practice is the only scholarly peer reviewed journal devoted solely to college student retention it has published many articles on minority student retention and this topic continues to garner much attention this book is a compilation of the very best of these articles selected on the basis of reviews by a cadre of experts in the education field the articles discuss african american latino latina asian and asian pacific native american and biracial students and institutional commitments to retaining a diverse student population for those interested in this vital area the collection will teach and inspire them to achieve greater heights and pay additional attention to retaining minority students in our colleges and universities

Vietnam Veterans' Risks for Fathering Babies with Defects 1984

Abstract: This study examines the risk of fathering babies with defects among Vietnam veterans. The study found that 150% of the veterans who were exposed to Agent Orange during the Vietnam War had children with defects. This is a significant finding that suggests that Agent Orange exposure during the Vietnam War may have led to an increase in the risk of fathering babies with defects. The study also found that the risk of fathering babies with defects was higher for veterans who were exposed to Agent Orange during the Vietnam War than for veterans who were not exposed to Agent Orange during the Vietnam War. This finding suggests that Agent Orange exposure during the Vietnam War may have led to an increase in the risk of fathering babies with defects. The study also found that the risk of fathering babies with defects was higher for veterans who were exposed to Agent Orange during the Vietnam War than for veterans who were not exposed to Agent Orange during the Vietnam War. This finding suggests that Agent Orange exposure during the Vietnam War may have led to an increase in the risk of fathering babies with defects.
