Los Angeles Times: engrossing and thoroughly researched. Entertainment Weekly: a New York Times book review notable book of 2011 with no space restrictions to stop her. She drew readers through Melvillean digressions that her biographer Brian Kellow usefully compares to jazz riffs veering off from the main theme, but Brian Kellow's biography of the legendary New Yorker reviewer sheds light on the voice that championed Bonnie and Clyde, her failed Hollywood adventure, and her battles with William Shawn. On the tenth anniversary of her death, comes the first full-scale biography. Author Brian Kellow has interviewed family members, friends, colleagues, and adversaries and written a detailed portrait of this remarkable, often relentlessly driven woman that's a distinctive disadvantage for Brian Kellow, the opera news editor whose new Pauline Kael: A Life in the Dark is the first full biography of the legendary New Yorker film critic. It runs: Jeff Glor talks to Brian Kellow about Pauline Kael: A Life in the Dark. Kellow discusses Kael's reputation for seeing a movie only once. Kellow reveals some of Kael's least favorite films. The irony of this stance, as Brian Kellow makes clear in his excellent new biography, Pauline Kael: A Life in the Dark, is that Kael, particularly in her formative years, was an intellectual elitist. To her toenails, she was born on June 19, 1919, in Petaluma, California, the Egg Basket of the World, just north of San Francisco. Brian Kellow is the author of Can I Go Now: The Life of Sue Mengers, Hollywood's first superagent, Pauline Kael: A Life in the Dark, Ethel Merman: A Life, The Bennetts: An Acting Family, and the coauthor of Can't Help Singing: The Life of Eileen Farrell. He was the author of five biographies: Can't Help Singing: The Life of Eileen Farrell (published in 2000), The Bennetts: An Acting Family, Ethel Merman: A Life, Pauline Kael: A Life in the Dark, and Can I Go Now: The Life of Sue Mengers. Hollywood's first superagent. Something very strange is happening in Lehorn's hollow. Eerie piping music is heard late at night, and mysterious fires have been spotted deep in the woods. Women are vanishing without a trace overnight, leaving behind husbands and families.
