Covering Muslims

for decades scholars and observers have criticized negative media portrayals of muslims and islam yet most of these critiques are limited by their focus on one specific location a limited time period or a single outlet this book offers the first systematic large scale analysis of american newspaper coverage of muslims through comparisons across groups time countries and topics it demonstrates conclusively that coverage of muslims is strikingly negative by every comparative measure examined muslim articles are negative relative to those touching on catholics jews or hindus and to those mentioning marginalized groups within the united states as diverse as african americans latinos mormons and atheists coverage of muslims has also been consistently and enduringly negative across the two decade period between 1996 and 2016 this pattern is not unique to the united states it also holds in countries such as britain canada and australia although less so in the global south moreover the strong negativity in the articles is not simply a function of stories about foreign conflict zones or radical islamist violence even though it is true that terrorism and extremism have become more prominent themes since 9 11 strikingly even articles about mundane topics tend to be negative the findings suggest that american newspapers may however inadvertently contribute to reinforcing boundaries that generate islamophobic attitudes to overcome these drawbacks journalists and citizens can consciously tone check the media to limit the stigmatizing effect of negative coverage so commonly associated with muslims and islam

Islamophobia in Non-Western Online Newspapers

the media attention towards islam has increased recently but meeting the quality standards in reporting the religion is often of great concern in this regard this issue has been debated since the aftermath of violent incidents such as the 9 11 attacks in 2001 the afghanistan war in 2002 the iraq war in 2003 the danish cartoon row in 2005 the london bombings in 2005 the paris attacks in 2015 and the new zealand shootings in 2017 in reporting violence the media tend to construct a negative image of islam which is likely to reproduce unfounded hostility toward islam and muslims known as islamophobia this book provides a systematic analysis of how non western online newspapers reproduce islamophobia in news reporting in early twentieth century british india prior to the arrival of digital medias and after the rise of nationalist political movements a small town paper from the margins of society became a key player in urdu journalism published in the isolated market town of bijnor madinah grew to hold influence across north india and the punjab while navigating complex issues of religious and political identity in print and the urdu public megan robb uses the previously unexamined perspective of the madinah to consider urdu print publics and urban life in south asia through a discursive and material analysis of madinah the book explores how muslims who had settled in ancestral qasbahs or small towns used newspapers to facilitate a new public consciousness the book demonstrates how madinah connected the urdu newspaper conversation both explicitly and implicitly with muslim identity and delineated the boundaries of a muslim public conversation in a way that emphasized rootedness to local politics and small urban spaces the case study of this influential but understudied newspaper reveals how a network of journalists with substantial ties to qasbahs produced a discourse self consciously alternative to the western influenced secularized cities megan robb augments the analysis with evidence from contemporary urdu english and hindi papers government records private diaries private library holdings ethnographic interviews and training materials for newspaper printers this thoroughly researched volume recovers the erasure of qasbah voices and proclaims the importance of space and time in definitions of the public sphere in south asia print and the urdu public demonstrates how an urdu newspaper published from the margins became central to the muslim public constituted in the first half of the twentieth century the media can problematize marginalize exclude or sterotype social groups this is often done by writing or speaking negatively about other social groups through text or talk the purpose of this study is to linguistically examine the creation of a stereotyped image of muslims through priming and framing in the media hence this study explores if a stereotyped image of muslims was identified in dutch and british mainstream newspapers de volkskrant trouw nrc de telegraaf the guardian the daily mirror the daily telegraph and the sun in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on theo van gogh in 2004 the 7 7 attacks in 2005 and the charlie hebdo attack 2015 in this way this study is primarily occupied with 1 if a stereotyped image of muslims is created through language 2 the agenda setting of muslims 3 the language used by journalists to describe muslims in response to terrorist attacks at home or abroad the analysis of language in the newspapers is conducted from a critical discourse analysis perspective and is done for both countries separately the analysis of dutch newspapers provides more evidence of stereotyped frames compared to the uk but there is not enough evidence to claim that any of the eight newspapers created a stereotyped image of muslims in the aftermath of the studied terrorist attacks includes priming theory agenda setting theory framing theory critical discourse analytics priming of muslims in newspapers framing of muslims in newspapers the modern nation state of turkey was established in 1923 but when and how did its citizens begin to identify themselves as turks mustafa kemal atatürk turkey s founding president is almost universally credited with creating a turkish national identity through his revolutionary program to secularize the former heartland of the ottoman empire yet despite turkey s status as the lone secular state in the muslim middle east religion remains a powerful force in turkish society and the country today is governed by a democratically elected political party with a distinctly religious islamist orientation in this history gavin d brockett takes a fresh look at the formation of turkish national identity focusing on the relationship between islam and nationalism and the process through which a religious national identity emerged challenging the orthodoxy that atatürk and the political elite imposed a sense of national identity from the top down brockett examines the social and political debates in provincial newspapers from around the country he shows that the unprecedented expansion of print media in turkey between 1945 and 1954 which followed the end of strict single party authoritarian government created a forum in which ordinary people could inject popular religious identities into the new turkish nationalism brockett makes a convincing case that it was this fruitful negotiation between secular nationalism and islam rather than the imposition of secularism alone that created the modern turkish national identity from the late ayatollah khomeini s fatwa against salman rushdie to the extremism of the taliban and the mass murder of the september 11th attacks the image of islam as a violent and anti western faith has featured dominantly in the global mass media in this book elzain elgamri sets out to refute such generalizations taking into account the historically conditioned orientalist discourses in light of the polarized relationship between islam and the west and deconstructing what has actually been reported in the british quality press elgamri points out that what has actually been journalistically covered is an incomplete fragment of a much more complex situation while acknowledging that these terrible acts were indeed committed in the name of islam and that they did involve bloody violence that claimed the lives of innocent civilians and caused much intimidation elgamri argues that these events have been represented by the media as an archetype of islam whereas in actual fact there is no single monolithic islam and consequently no single monolithic muslim community the author concludes that contrary to what is frequently depicted islam and muslim societies are not confined only to confrontation violence terrorism and antagonism towards everything western but rather are extremely diverse in their religious and political outlooks
