Chess Life and Review 1975 the presence of women in congress is at an all time high approximately one of every five members is female and record numbers of women are running for public office for the 2018 midterms at the same time congress is more polarized than ever and little research exists on how women in congress view their experiences and contributions to american politics today drawing on personal interviews with over three quarters of the women serving in the 114th congress 2015 17 the authors analyze how these women navigate today's stark partisan divisions and whether they feel effective in their jobs through first person perspectives a seat at the table looks at what motivates these women's legislative priorities and behavior details the ways in which women experience service within a male dominated institution and highlights why it matters that women sit in the nation's federal legislative chambers it describes the strategies women employ to overcome any challenges they confront as well as the opportunities available to them the book examines how gender interacts with political party race and ethnicity seniority chamber and district characteristics to shape women's representational influence and behavior finding that party and race ethnicity are the two most complicating factors to a singular narrative of women's congressional representation while congresswomen's perspectives experiences and influence are neither uniform nor interchangeable they strongly believe their presence matters in myriad ways affecting congressional culture priorities processes debates and outcomes

Chess Life & Review 1975 psychology of behavioural interventions and pandemic control is a unique text that examines the covid 19 pandemic in relation to population risk factors and the efficacy of non pharmaceutical interventions deployed by many governments around the world to bring the pandemic under control the book presents critical and insightful lessons that can be drawn up to assess governments performance in relation to the pandemic and to guide the construction of effective measures to put in place in readiness for any future public health crises on this scale it starts by examining lessons learned from historical pandemics and then turns to early epidemiological modelling that influenced the decision of many governments to implement wide ranging interventions designed to bring public behaviour under close control it also examines the findings of research that tried to understand pre-existing population risks factors which had some mediating influences over covid 19 mortality rates and the effects of interventions early modelling work is critiqued and the discussion also identifies weaknesses in early modelling research the author barrie gunter goes on to consider ways in which multiple disciplines can be triangulated to produce more comprehensive models of risk he also offers suggestions on how future pandemic related research might be constructed to deliver more powerful analyses of the effects of interventions and the role played by different population risk factors this insight might then deliver better policies for pandemic control and for safe release from that control this is essential reading for students and researchers in psychology public health and medical sciences it would also be of interest to policy makers assessing government strategies responses and performance
