even though we instruct our children not to lie the truth is that lying is a fundamental part of children's development socially cognitively emotionally morally lying can sometimes be more compassionate than telling the truth even more ethical reading specific children's books can instruct child readers how to be guided by an etiquette of lying to know when to tell the truth and when to lie equally important these stories can help prevent them from being prey to those liars who are intent on taking advantage of them becoming a critical reader requires that one learn how to lie judiciously as well as to see through others lies when humans first began to speak we began to lie when we began to lie we started telling stories this is the paradox that in order to tell truthful stories we must be good liars novels about child artists showcased here illustrate how the protagonist embraces this paradox accepting the stigma that a writer is a liar who tells the truth emily dickinson's phrase telling it slant best expresses the vision of how writers for children and young adults negotiate the conundrum of both protecting child readers and teaching them to protect themselves this volume explores the pervasiveness of lying as well as the necessity for lying in our society the origins of lying as connected to language acquisition the realization that storytelling is both lying and truth-telling and the negotiations child artists must process in order to grasp the paradox that to become storytellers they must become expert liars and lie detectors this text is an exploration of the interplay between employment and domestic relations within a specific group of young women which includes single working women without children and working mothers it is based on actual experiences as related in interviews and uses longitudinal data to chart the experience of young adult women living a contradiction between work and family the text also employs social theory to interpret interview data showing the interdependence of young women as active agents and the constraints and opportunities of the social structure the main conclusion is that the social structuring of women as primarily mothers who also work is falling away but that it is left to individuals to work their way through the contradictory system facing them
