Faces in the Water 1961 is a shocking novel about mental illness which draws on Janet Frame's own early life. It takes place inside two New Zealand mental institutions where abusive practices so frequent in the psychiatry of the time destroy the lives and when Janet Frame's doctor suggested that she write about her traumatic experiences in mental institutions in order to free herself from them, the result was Faces in the Water, a powerful and poignant novel. Istina Mavet descends through increasingly desolate wards with the threat of leucotomy ever present. Faces in the Water (Kindle edition) draws on the experiences of Janet Frame's early life but it also explores the world of the mind, isolated and inarticulate, showcasing Frame's wisdom, compassion, and genius. Janet Frame's Faces in the Water (1961) is a fictionalized account of her time in New Zealand mental institutions. It was written as a therapy exercise while she received psychiatric care in London where she lived and wrote from 1956 to 1963. Written with unsparing precision and astounding immediacy, Faces in the Water takes the reader behind the walls of two hospitals, Cliffhaven and Treecroft, and into the hearts and minds of its confused and tormented patients. Harrowing but beautiful, Faces in the Water is a landmark in the literature of mental illness and in 1961 confirmed Janet Frame's growing stature on the international literary scene as a writer whose work was attracting critical praise in addition to a wide readership. When Janet Frame's doctor suggested that she write about her traumatic experiences in mental institutions in order to free herself from them, the result was Faces in the Water, a powerful and poignant novel. Hilary Mantel: When Janet Frame's doctor suggested that she write about her traumatic experiences in mental institutions in order to free herself from them, Faces in the Water draws on the experiences of Janet Frame's early life but it also explores the world of the mind, isolated and inarticulate, showcasing Frame's wisdom, compassion, and genius. This chapter examines how New Zealand author Janet Frame responded to both the demands of a national literature and biographical enquiry into her life. Frame in her early work courts the idea that madness provides special insight, an understanding that was read biographically by the masculine cultural nationalist coterie surrounding her. At this Faces in the Water draws on the experiences of Janet Frame's early life but it also explores the world of the mind, isolated and inarticulate, showcasing Frame's wisdom, compassion, and genius. Janet Frame's second novel, Faces in the Water, and Michel Foucault's Madness and Civilization were both published in the same year, 1961, albeit in two countries at opposite ends of the world: Christchurch and Paris. Both texts contain remarkably
