Rethinking Social Work

1997

this book presents the first analysis and critique of the idea of practice as it has developed in the various theoretical traditions of the social sciences and the humanities the concept of a practice understood broadly as a tacit possession that is shared by and the same for different people has a fatal difficulty the author argues this object must in some way be transmitted reproduced in bourdieu's famous phrase in different persons but there is no plausible mechanism by which such a process occurs the historical uses of the concept from durkheim to kripke's version of wittgenstein provide examples of the contortions that thinkers have been forced into by this problem and show the ultimate implausibility of the idea of the interpersonal transmission of these supposed objects without the notion of sameness the concept of practice collapses into the concept of habit the conclusion sketches a picture of what happens when we do without the notion of a shared practice and how this bears on social theory and philosophy it explains why social theory cannot get beyond the stage of constructing fuzzy analogies and why the standard constructions of the contemporary philosophical problem of relativism depend upon this defective notion
