Studies on "Perfect" Hyperbranched Chains Free in Solution and Confined in a Cylindrical Pore 2016 lianwei li s ph d thesis solves a long standing problem in polymer physics how does a hyperbranched chain pass through a cylindrical pore smaller than its size under an elongational flow field the question was asked by the nobel laureate the late professor de gennes in the 70s but has never been seriously addressed through real experiments this thesis outlines how lianwei li

developed a novel polymerization strategy using a seesaw type macromonomer to prepare a set of defect free hyperbranched chagins with different overall molar masses and controllable uniform subchain lengths the author then unearthed how the critical minimum flow rate at which a hyperbranched chain can pass through the pore is dependent on the overall molar mass and the subchain length the experimental results give a unified description of polymer chains with different topologies passing through a small cylindrical pore which enables us to separate chains by their topologies instead of their sizes in ultrafiltration in addition this research also reveals how the chain structure of amphiphilic hyperbranched block and graft copolymers affect their solution properties including the establishments of several classic scaling laws that relate the chain size and the intrinsic viscosity to the overall molar mass and the subchain length respectively this work has led to numerous publications in high impact peer reviewed journals

The Three Sector Solution 2017-04-04 this collection of essays had its origins in a one day workshop held in august 2015 at the australian national university jointly convened by dr john butcher anzso and professor david gilchrist curtin not for profit initiative the purpose of the workshop was to bring together academic researchers policy practitioners and thought leaders to address a variety of emerging issues facing policymakers public sector commissioners not for profit providers of publicly funded services and businesses interested in opportunities for social investment the workshop itself generated a great deal of interest and a baker s dozen of contributors challenged and engaged a full house the level of enthusiasm shown by the audience for the subject matter was such that the decision to curate the presentations in the form of a book was never in doubt the editors trust that this volume will vindicate that decision at one time the state exercised a near monopoly in the delivery of social programs today almost every important public problem is a three sector problem and yet we have little idea of what a high performing three sector production system looks like it is the editors hope that this volume will provide a foundation for some answers to these important public policy questions itself for anyone who wants to know what to expect from corporate backed republican leadership in washington d c there is no better guide than this record of what the same set of actors has been doing in the state legislatures under its control
