intents of her characters after all as agatha christie and patricia highsmith would attest trains have long been the ideal setting for the perfect murder turning fifty has not filled sally with joy she s sitting on the kings cross to harrogate train the morning after her disastrous birthday meal feeling fed up and hungover to hell and then a stranger climbs on board and sits down opposite her you know those passengers who really really annoy you on trains the ones who invade your personal space and worse well he s one of those and he s about to push sally to breaking point
