ever since my fortunate or shall i say unfortunate connection with that famous case of murder in gramercy park i have had it intimated to me by many of my friends and by some who were not my friends that no woman who had met with such success as myself in detective work would ever be satisfied with a single display of her powers and that sooner or later i would find myself again at work upon some other case of striking peculiarities as vanity has never been my foible and as moreover i never have forsaken and never am likely to forsake the plain path marked out for my sex at any other call than that of duty i invariably responded to these insinuations by an affable but incredulous smile striving to excuse the presumption of my friends by remembering their ignorance of my nature and the very excellent reasons i had for my one notable interference in the police affairs of new york city besides though i appeared to be resting quietly if not in entire contentment on my laurels i was not so utterly removed from the old atmosphere of crime and its detection as the world in general considered me to be mr gryce still visited me not on business of course but as a friend for whom i had some regard and naturally our conversation was not always confined to the weather or even to city politics provocative as the latter subject is of wholesome controversy in natural kinds and genesis the classification of material entities stewart umphrey raises and answers two questions what is it to be a natural kind and are there in fact any natural kinds first using the everyday understanding of things he argues that natural kinds may be understood as classes or as types and that the members or tokens of such kinds are individual continuants a continuant is essentially a being in becoming a material thing which changes and yet remains the same in virtue of its nature or essence as long as it exists in the primary sense of the term then a natural kind is a class whose members closely resemble one another substantially in virtue of their essences alternatively it is a type whose tokens exemplify it in virtue of their essences to answer the second question one must make use of relevant scientific theories as well umphrey agrees with scientific essentialists that there are natural kinds but he argues that most of the chemical physical and biological kinds posited in current theories are not natural kinds in the primary sense of the term the natural kinds realism he affirms is thus quite restricted it requires the existence of enduring things which closely resemble one another in virtue of their essences and such things exist apparently only if they have come into being or emerged in the course of symmetry breaking events natural kinds and genesis will be of interest to philosophers of science and to those interested in the metaphysics of natural kinds and their members
