this story came about one winter evening while i was watching television in my living room in our gray stone house in king george county virginia suddenly a little tiny gray mouse with an exceptionally long tail flew around the edge of the entry way into our living room he ran like wind along the base board of the room and down into our heating registers and into the heating ducks of our home i don t believe i have ever seen a mouse with such a long tail i tried to catch him but was unable to because he was so tiny in his body and lightweight that he could run like the wind with his long long tail swishing back and forth and from side to side as he ran this inspired me to make up this story about sulon the mouse with his tail too long i believe this story will be enjoyed by both parents and children and grandparents alike who will read this book for themselves or to their children or grandchildren it also teaches us not to be so cruel to others as we never know when their kind behavior is worth more than all our cruel behavior could ever be remember in the bible hebrew 13 12 let brotherly love continue be not forgetful to entertain strangers for thereby some have entertained angles unaware in indigenous north american film native americans tell their own stories and thereby challenge a range of political and historical contradictions including egregious misrepresentations by hollywood although indians in film have long been studied especially as characters in hollywood westerns indian film itself has received relatively little scholarly attention in imagic moments lee schweninger offers a much needed corrective examining films in which the major inspiration the source material and the acting are essentially native schweninger looks at a selection of mostly narrative fiction films from the united states and canada and places them in historical and generic contexts exploring films such as powwow highway smoke signals and skins he argues that in and of themselves these films constitute and in fact emphatically demonstrate forms of resistance and stories of survival as they talk back to hollywood self representation itself can be seen as a valid form of resistance and as an aspect of a cinema of sovereignty in which the indigenous peoples represented are the same people who engage in the filming and who control the camera despite their low budgets and often nonprofessional acting indigenous films succeed in being all the more engaging in their own right and are indicative of the complexity vibrancy and survival of myriad contemporary native cultures
