excerpt from some principles of literary criticism the following chapters were first prepared for the college lecture room and although since rewritten they doubtless still betray by a certain dull didactic manner the place of their origin while directing the work of college classes i had often looked about for a book that should give a compendious statement of the essentials of literature and the grounds of critical estimate finding no such book i essayed to make one two or three books on the subject born i judge of the same want that produced this one have indeed appeared since these lectures were first written but their purpose and method are quite different from those i have had in mind i have attempted neither to expound a philosophy of criticism nor to elaborate a critical method but simply to state as plainly as i might some qualities that by common consent are to be found in all writing deserving to be called literature and to lay down some fundamental principles that must be assumed in all sound critical judgments about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works

Some Principles of Literary Criticism (Classic Reprint)

excerpt from some principles of fiction any general examination of the novelist s art must appear arid and theoretical it cannot fail to be directed towards the more formal elements in that art while criticism of individual novelists can deal more adequately with the life they are trying to create a book of this sort is doomed to appear excessively schematic and some people may object that profitable things can be said about this or that novel but hardly about the novel for as lawrence said all rules of construction hold good only for novels that are copies of other novels that a great many things cannot be said in a book of this sort must be obvious to anyone who has ever given any thought to the novel one can isolate for the purpose of analysis such an element as plot for instance but in many novels that do not lack unity the principle of cohesion is something we cannot call plot something to which we cannot do justice except in individual studies of these books or of their authors but though much must be left unsaid something can be said and a generalization may be useful even if it does not cover every instance one of the purposes of such an examination is to help writers and it is very difficult indeed to help writers except over formal problems the only useful help many writers have ever given or received has been over small points such as punctuation or the phrasing of a sentence the present book deals with other aspects of the novel than those dealt with in my former treatise it aspires only to an internal consistency it is not a correction or a defence or amust sometimes mention about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works excerpt from the principles of rhetoric with constructive and critical work in composition the art of instruction for the secondary school it has been said may be summed up in one sentence inspire enthusiastic activity it is not enough however to inspire such activity provision for its proper exercise must be made the material that forms the basis of this book was collected in my own classes during a period of years for the purpose of arousing and satisfying the pupils interest and activity with reference to rhetoric and composition later at the request of teachers the material was put into the form of a book that the book might meet general conditions in the classroom it was submitted before its publication to able instructors and critics teachers of English in a number of widely separated centres their suggestions were valuable and are incorporated in the book as published because many text books already in use contain admirable presentations of rhetorical principles with exercises on some of them and with lists of composition subjects it is by no means unnecessary for the author of a new rhetoric to state what differentiates his work from other books on the same subject about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at excerpt from judgment in literature in nearly all large towns and especially in the capital cities of civilized nations there are collections of statues pictures and books even in the streets we see the forms of men and women wrought in marble or cast in bronze placed high upon pedestals to meet the gaze of every one who may pass by them in nearly every house there are pictures upon the walls and vases or other ornaments arranged upon shelves and books lying on the table and in large houses there are whole chambers set apart solely for collections of pictures and statuary or lined with rows of books the mere existence of these objects shows us that art is an element in the life of civilized man for we should not care to surround ourselves with such things unless we wished our minds to be sometimes occupied both with them and with the thoughts which they suggest criticism is the exercise of judgment in the province of art and literature and the critic is a person who is possessed of the knowledge necessary to enable him to pronounce right judgments upon the merit or worth of such works as come within this province about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
