when the historian has described the rise and fall of empires and dynasties and has recounted with care and exactness the details of the great political movements that have changed the map of continents there remains the question what was the cause of these revolutions in human society what were the real motives that were operative in the hearts and minds of the persons in the great drama of history that has been displayed the mere chain of events as they have passed before the eye as it surveys the centuries does not give an explanation of itself there must be a cause that lies behind these events and of which they are but the effects this cause the true cause of history lies in the minds and hearts of the men and nations the student of the past is coming more and more to see that the only hope of making history a science and not a mere chronicle is to be found in the clear ascertainment and study of those psychological conditions which have made actions what they were foremost among those conditions have been the hopes aspirations and ideals of men and women these have been the greatest motive forces in the history of the world these quite as much as merely selfish considerations have guided the conduct of the men who have made history not merely those who have been leaders in the great movements of society but the multitude of followers who have not attracted the attention of historians but have nevertheless given the strength and force to the revolutions of the world the deepest interest in the history of christian women lies in the way in which woman s status in society has been modified by the new religion the chronicle of saintly life and deeds is a part of that history but there are also women who have signally failed to attain those virtues for which their religion called these too have their place for both have either forwarded or retarded the realization of woman s place in society often the heathen spirit is but half concealed under the mask of christianity but the whole tone of society has been changed nevertheless by the ideas and ideals which that religion brought before men s minds in a new and vivid manner excerpt from the evolution of early christianity a genetic study of first century christianity in relation to its religious environment of christian origins must first orient himself in the life of the times if he would understand the genesis of the new religion as well as the literature it produced the possibility of obtaining this orientation has greatly increased in recent years much help may now be derived from the historical study of religions as a whole which supplies certain broad principles capable of general application these results emphasize the necessity of taking account of psychological processes in the rise and development of all religions and they make clear the importance of social and cultural forces for the determination of religious phenomena but more immediate help comes from observing the actual historical situation in which the early christians lived within the last half century various scholars have devoted themselves to the study of later judaism with the result that the historian can now know for the most part the actual religious situation which conditioned the lives of the first disciples on jewish soil about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works many of the problems afflicting american education are the result of a critical shortage of qualified teachers in the classrooms the teacher crisis is surprisingly resistant to reforms and is getting worse this analysis of the causes underlying the crisis seeks to offer concrete affordable proposals for effective reform vivian troen and katherine boles two experienced classroom teachers and education consultants argue that because teachers are recruited from a pool of underqualified candidates given inadequate preparation and dropped into a culture of isolation without mentoring support or incentives for excellence they are programmed to fail half quit within their first five years troen and boles offer an alternative a model of reform they call the millennium school which changes the way teachers work and improves the quality of their teaching when teaching becomes a real profession they contend more academically able people will be drawn into it colleges will be forced to improve the quality of their education and better prepared teachers will enter the classroom and improve the profession from the preface this book does not aim to furnish a detailed account of the territorial doctrinal ecclesiastical and literary developments of early christianity it seeks rather to analyze and interpret the environmental forces which stimulated nourished or directed the growth of the new religion consequently interest centers mainly in the lives of actual persons whose activities were related to a specific setting within which they worked out their various problems this study accordingly deals primarily with the origins of the christian movement and only secondarily with the writings which the movement produced sporadically and sometimes quite incidentally in the process of expansion later generations have become so accustomed to think of the new testament as the source of their religion that they with difficulty appreciate the situation of the early christians during that spontaneous and formative period when the champions of the new faith were performing their work without the aid of any distinctively christian scriptures when the new testament books were ultimately assembled they preserved records of christian activity and thinking from different localities and various periods and so these writings constitute an important source of information for the study of christian origins but they render this service truly only when they are interpreted as the product of the movement of whose history they are a valuable though fragmentary record hence the student of christian origins must first orient himself in the life of the times if he would understand the genesis of the new religion as well as the literature it produced the possibility of obtaining this orientation has greatly increased in recent years much help may now be derived from the historical study of religions as a whole which supplies certain broad principles capable of general application these results emphasize the necessity of taking account of psychological processes in the rise and development of all religions and they make clear the importance of social and cultural forces for the determination of religious phenomena but more immediate help comes from observing the actual nothing illustrates this so well as the history of christianity for no religion is so well known the facts are plainly visible and would be plainly seen by all were it not for the general tendency of ecclesiastical scholarship to consult the records of the past only to find the reflection of its own features the general condition of religion in the roman empire at the beginning of the christian era was one of far advanced disintegration and rapid synthesis in every district there could be found the remains of old local religions which retained the loyalty of the conservative but no longer aroused any vital response in the emotions of the multitudes or in the interest of the educated at that time and for many generations afterward the roman landowners to take one example maintained the ceremonies and customs of an agricultural animism which for their ancestors had been a living religion but for them had become aesthetic conventional and superstitious an appendage to life not its driving force those who wish can read a description of it written with a sympathy possible only for one who felt the analogy of his own experience in the pages of marius the epicurean in which walter pater by a wonderful tour de force wove an exact and scholarly knowledge of the original documents into such a web of artistic english that the deep learning of the book cannot be appreciated except by those who have some small share in it themselves
